For example, we can render content in a service or in other classes outside the scope of a Web request. 'mrhaki' } } Next, we create an integration test to verify that the content is rendered correctly:// File: test/integration/page/renderrer/RenderOutputTests.groovy package page.renderrer import org.junit.Assert import org.junit.Test class RenderOutputTests { RenderService renderService() @Test void welcomeMessage() { Assert.assertEquals 'Hi, mrhaki', renderService.createWelcomeMessage().trim() } @Test void confirmMessage() { final String expectedOutput = " ConfirmationConfirmation title> Hi, mrhaki Thank you for your registration. The PageRenderer works outside the scope of the request, which is required for Sitemesh layouts. This is mainly used in AJAX requests. layout (optional) - The layout to be used for the response var (optional) - The name of the variable to pass to a template, defaults to Groovy's default argument 'it' if not specified bean (optional) - The bean to be used in the rendering template (optional) - The template to be used in rendering the collection (optional) - To render a template in each item in a contentType collection (optional) - The contentType of the response encoding (optional) - The encoding of the response (as a single, unnamed first parameter) - A Converter that should be rendered as Response Plug-in (optional) - The plug-in to look for the template in status (optional) - The HTTP status code for using the file (optional) - The byte, java.io.File or inputStream that you want to send with the response fileName (optional) - To specify an attachment filename when rendering a file. To use the application, you can go directly to the home page. The groovyPageRenderer occurrence is of type and there's a whole m @render() like we use on a controller. render "some text" render(text: render(text: xml", contentType: "text/xml", encoding: "UTF-8") def theShining = new Book(title: 'The Shining', author: 'Stephen King') render(template: "book", model: [book: theShining]) render(template: "book", collection: [b1, b2, b3]) def theShining = new Book(title: 'The Shining', author: 'Stephen King') render(template: "book", bean: theShining) def theShining = new Book(title: 'The Shining', author: 'Stephen King') renderview: "viewName", model: [book: theShining]) render(view: "viewName") render { div(id: "myDiv", "some text inside the div") } render(contentType: "text/xml") { books { for (b in books) { book(title: b.title, author: b.author) } } } render(contentType: "application/json") { book(title: b.title, author: b.author) } render(status: 503, text: "Failed to update book ${b.id}") render(file: new File(absolutePath), fileName: "book.pdf") In a Grails application we use Groovy Server Pages (GSP) views and templates to create content we want to display in the web browser. Os layouts Sitemesh nÃ£o podem ser usados. Mas podemos simplesmente contornar esta questÃ£o. O resultado Ã© um valor String. Por exemplo, se vocÃª especificar tanto a coleÃ§Ã£o quanto o modelo, o parÃ¢metro do modelo serÃ¡ ignorado. So we create our absolute link with the grailsLinkGenerator and pass it as a model attribute to our GPS view.package page.renderrer import org.codehaus.groovy.grails.web.mapping.LinkGenerator class RenderService { PageRenderer groovyPageRenderer LinkGenerator grailsLinkGenerator String createConfirmMessage() { final String homePageLink = grailsLinkGenerator.link(controller: 'index', absolute: true) groovyPageRenderer.render(view: '/email/confirm', model: [link: homePageLink, username: findUsername()]) } String createWelcomeMessage() { groovyPageRenderer.render template: '/email/welcome', model: [username: findUsername()] private String findUsername() { // Lookup for this example we we A simple chain value //. Because we are out of the Web Request Scope, we can not generate absolute links in GSP view directly.
